

Call me crazy

I like crazy [REDACTED]

I like over-the-top [REDACTED] that come bounding in biting at their [REDACTED] (or anything else they can cram into their mouths). I like rambunctious, nutty, go-getters that exhaust their [REDACTED]. Those are my favorite [REDACTED] to [REDACTED]. Why do I enjoy these [REDACTED] so much? I find them to be surprisingly easy and rewarding. All of that [REDACTED] energy can be channeled to our own purposes!

Most [REDACTED] want to [REDACTED] the arousal their [REDACTED] show (and most [REDACTED] will [REDACTED] progressively with age and training); some competition or [REDACTED] want to keep the hair-trigger reaction, but with reliable, [REDACTED] behaviors. Both ends are possible with [REDACTED].

A friend, a [REDACTED] like myself, was bemoaning the superb enthusiasm of her young, [REDACTED]. His habit of [REDACTED] was wearing her out. "I can't [REDACTED] until I can stop his [REDACTED]," she complained.

"Not true at all," I protested. "Don't you dare try to stop that [REDACTED]. You want that [REDACTED] for happy, enthusiastic [REDACTED]. Use it!"

Channel the energy

How do you channel and [REDACTED] that energy? There are several principles I follow in [REDACTED] the energy of eager [REDACTED].

- [REDACTED] the crazy stuff. [REDACTED] of "crazy [REDACTED]" tend to see and focus on the obnoxious [REDACTED], the [REDACTED] biting, the [REDACTED] enthusiastic [REDACTED], and the persistent harassment to [REDACTED]. I see a [REDACTED] asking in every possible way to engage with [REDACTED], [REDACTED] begging for the interaction of [REDACTED]. These [REDACTED] just adore [REDACTED] and respond to it quickly.

Many compulsive [REDACTED] require considerable time and effort to [REDACTED] behavior, all before starting to teach desirable behavior. With [REDACTED] can jump straight into teaching a new [REDACTED] and disregard what you don't want, trusting that it will [REDACTED] shortly. If you are like me, the surplus excitement won't bother you. With [REDACTED] you'll get what you want soon enough!

Love that [REDACTED]. Enthusiasm carries into [REDACTED], making [REDACTED] that much [REDACTED]. All the effort [REDACTED] is putting into bucking like a bronco on [REDACTED] will soon be thrown into eager [REDACTED] and fast [REDACTED]! This makes the [REDACTED]'s work simpler. You don't have to create new [REDACTED], you just have to shape what's already [REDACTED]. And that's perfect for a lazy [REDACTED] like me!

Why do I enjoy these [REDACTED] so much? I find them to be surprisingly easy and rewarding.
